'Huge victory for advocacy'

Social media helped push Egypt to free Canadian journalist: Group

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

Canadians must continue to raise their voices on behalf of people detained abroad, local rights groups said as Mohamed Fahmy was released from an Egyptian prison Wednesday.

"We see this as a huge victory for advocacy," said Tom Henheffer, executive director of the Canadian Journalists for Free Expression, who added that Fahmy's unexpected pardon is a direct result of international pressure — much of it generated from social media and targeted outreach.

"That's what got him out of jail," he said. "These kinds of campaigns, even when they look hopeless sometimes, can really work."

Mohamed Fahmy and his wife Marwa Omara. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

People who want to help can come forward with information, call or write to embassies of countries where Canadians are detained, join social media campaigns, circulate existing petitions or simply donate to organizations leading efforts, advocates say.

Any and all support given can make a big difference, said Elizabeth Berton-Hunter, spokeswoman for Amnesty International in Toronto.

"It's definitely more helpful to have that kind of support rather than facing the challenges on their own."

Fahmy, a Canadian journalist, was sentenced to three years in prison last month after being convicted of terrorism-related charges.

Local groups will now turn their efforts to a multitude of other cases where they say people have been wrongfully detained. That includes Mohammed el-Attar, a former Toronto banker serving a 15-year jail term in Egypt. He was in the country to visit family in 2007 when he was charged with spying.

There's also Huseyin Celil, a Burlington human-rights activist charged with terrorism in China and sentenced to life in prison in 2006.

More recently, the case of Salim Al-Aradi, a Libyan-Canadian allegedly tortured and detained in Saudi Arabia for more than a year without charges, has been drawing attention. His family is in Windsor.

Graffiti-style mural resounds with engineers, community

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

There's a new mural in town, and it's arguably the city's longest piece of graffiti-style art.

Toronto artist Jason Wing — whose graffiti name is SKAM — led an effort to turn a design from University of Toronto's faculty of engineering into the 276-foot-long piece near College and St. George streets.

The aim was to "tell the engineering story while engaging the community," said Catherine Riddell, director of communications at U of T Engineering.

It took 300 cans of spray paint to complete the installation.

The impressive creation stretches along the construction site for the school's Centre for Engineering Innovation and Entrepreneurship.

Engineering students will be on hand at this year's Nuit Blanche to tell the stories behind each aspect of the piece.

Here's a sneak peek at what's highlighted on the frieze.

300

Cans of spray paint were used to create the giant mural.

Space invaders

A fun image that's meant to represent how U of T Engineering students are engaging in video games and the development of mobile apps.

Robot Tangy

It's one of many assistive robots developed by U of T Engineering students and faculty. They provide cognitive stimulation to patients and help seniors with simple activities.

Heart

This highlights the school's new transitional biology and engineering program, described as a key component of the Ted Rogers Centre for Heart Research.

Solar car

Blue Sky Solar Racing is a student group that competes at the World Solar Challenge, a 3,000 kilometre race across Australia every year. U of T's team has been represented at the event, racing solar cars made by students, for nearly a decade.

River and faucet

A focus on the upcoming Institute for Water Innovation, which will be part of the Centre for Engineering Innovation and Entrepreneurship and will develop new approaches to improving stewardship of water resources.

TTC streetcar, traffic lights

The element was put in the design to highlight U of T Engineering partnerships with cities across the country on projects that improve the way people move.

NDP candidate opposes abortion

ELECTION 2015

Says personal beliefs won't interfere with party policy

The New Democrats are standing by one Toronto candidate who says he opposes abortion and same-sex marriage on biblical grounds.

"That is my personal life. My personal life is different from (the) party line, because when I stand by the party, I have to stand by the party," Rev. KM Shanthikumar, a Christian pastor in the Tamil community and the NDP candidate in Scarborough-Rouge Park, told Torstar this week.

Brad Lavigne, a senior campaign adviser for the NDP, said Shanthikumar had signed a declaration required of all potential candidates that says he would acknowledge the party policy, in particular its position that women have the right to choose whether to terminate a pregnancy and that same-sex couples have the right to marry.

"The candidate in question was expressing personal beliefs and has clearly stated that those opinions that he holds on the matter of abortion and marriage equality are his personal views," Lavigne said Tuesday.

"Despite any personal views, he has accepted the position of the party on those policy measures."

Reached by telephone Monday morning, Shanthikumar said he is able to keep his personal beliefs separate from the NDP position.

VIA RAIL PLOT

Convicted terrorists given life sentences

Two men found guilty of terrorism charges after being accused of plotting to derail a passenger train were sentenced to life in prison Wednesday as a Toronto judge found neither of them had expressed remorse for their offences.

Raed Jaser and Chiheb Esseghaier were found guilty in March on a total of eight charges between them.

Justice Michael Code, the Toronto judge who presided over their trial earlier this year, found both men have not renounced their extremists beliefs, have not accepted responsibility for their offences and present questionable prospects for rehabilitation.

"I am satisfied that life imprisonment is the appropriate sentence," he said, noting that the men would receive some credit for time already spent in custody. Both men aren't eligible for parole until 2023.

Jaser shook his head, closed his eyes at one point and held his face in one hand after his sentence was delivered.

Esseghaier appeared nonchalant, crossing his arms and leaning back in the prisoner's box as Code read out his 53-page sentencing decision.

"The life sentence doesn't have any meaning for me," the self-represented Esseghaier told Code after his sentence was delivered.

Crown lawyers had asked for life sentences for both men and expressed their satisfaction with Code's decision.

Jaser's lawyer said he was disappointed with the outcome of the case and already had instructions to appeal both Jaser's conviction and sentence.

"We do view it as excessive," John Norris said of the sentence, adding that Jaser was "somewhat stunned" by Wednesday's developments.

"He is a resilient man. He is trying to remain positive."

Jaser's lawyer had asked for a sentence of five and a half years and argued mitigating factors in his client's case included entrapment, segregation during pre-trial custody and drug addiction. Code rejected those arguments in delivering his sentence.

"My overall impressions of Mr. Jaser are that he is intelligent, devious and untrustworthy," said Code. "He has not yet accepted responsibility for the offences, not yet expressed remorse, not yet renounced his violent and racist beliefs."

IN BRIEF

Man killed in Scarborough

A man in his early 30s died Tuesday night in Scarborough from what police believe to be stab wounds to the upper body.

Toronto police received a call at 10:10 p.m. Tuesday night for a man who was found unconscious outside a car on Oakmeadow Boulevard, near Neilson Road and Military Trail.

He was rushed to the trauma centre shortly after, and pronounced dead.

Investigators have confirmed that one suspect has turned himself into police. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

TENANCY

Foreign money could flee over the ramshackle units: Lawyer

Steven Goetz
Metro | Toronto

Queen's Park should take note of what's happening at downtown's Parkside Student Residence and make sure the situation isn't repeated, said an advocate for tenant rights.

The private apartment building — which caters to students at downtown schools — promised "state-of-the-art accommodations" with "luxury amenities" in online promotional material.

Instead, many students who've moved into the former hotel at Carlton and Jarvis streets say they found clogged toilets, crumbling ceilings and apartments that look like they were built using materials pulled from junkyards.

There's a lot at stake for the province as it looks to attract international students, said Kenneth Hale, legal counsel for the Advocacy Centre for Tenants Ontario.

"If people come here and get ripped off, that doesn't help," he said. "This idea of private student residences with luxury features we normally associate with a condo development is new in the Toronto market."

Students and parents, some of whom are looking for refunds or discounts on rent, say developer Knightstone Capital Management and its management firm have ignored their concerns. The company declined Metro's request for comment.

The city has said it can only enforce building-code requirements and can't intervene if students weren't delivered the rooms they had expected.

Several people have turned to Ryerson University, which has directed students to its off-campus tenant services where they can receive legal counsel, school spokesman Michael Forbes said.

Their best option is to file complaints with the Landlord and Tenant Board (LTB), which could reward students with rent reductions as high as 50 per cent, Hale said. Students could file individually or collectively for a shared settlement, he said.

> Students end up putting up with a lot that they really shouldn't have to.
> Geordie Dent

Students are often inexperienced tenants who don't understand their rights, said Geordie Dent, executive director of the Federation of Metro Tenants' Associations, which assists tenants making claims before the LTB.

"Most students have only ever lived with their parents, where whatever mom and dad says goes," Dent said. "They're not used to the fact that when you rent from a landlord, all of a sudden the law oversees that relationship and you have rights."

HIGHWAY 401

Fatal pileup cuts off traffic

Provincial police say two people have died in a multi-vehicle collision on Highway 401 east of Toronto.

Police say the collision involving eight vehicles occurred Wednesday morning in Ajax.

Officers say two transport trucks and six smaller vehicles were involved in the crash, and one of the smaller vehicles was crushed under the front transport truck with the male driver trapped inside.

Despite efforts by emergency responders, the driver couldn't be extricated. The 63-year-old man from Mississauga died at the scene.

A 57-year-old man from Oshawa was critically injured and later died in hospital, while another driver was sent to hospital with minor injuries.

Dense fog may have played a role, according to police. Environment Canada issued a fog advisory after visibility was reduced to 250 metres or less in many areas of southern Ontario.

The collision completely blocked all eastbound lanes on the 401, leaving traffic backed up as far as Pickering.

U.S. company plans to store Canuck data closer to home

Jessica Smith Cross
Metro | Toronto

An American company has made a business opportunity out of growing fears about the privacy and security of Canadian data held in cloud storage in the U.S.

DigitalOcean announced Wednesday it's opening a Toronto-based data centre, allowing Canadian companies' data to physically stay, as the firm put it, in the "Great White North."

DigitalOcean co-founder Mitch Wainer said his customers, who are mostly software designers, had raised concerns about data being stored south of the border. More than 1,000 customers voted "yes" to a single post about creating a Canadian storage space.

Heidi Bohaker, a University of Toronto history professor who studies digital humanities and recently co-wrote a report on foreign cloud storage services, says the concerns are real.

And, she notes, they're relevant to everyone, not just businesses.

"As a university professor, students email me when they're in crisis, with personal information," she said, by way of example. "That's the kind of information that should be held in the highest degree of confidence."

Problems could crop up if those emails are stored on servers in another country.

"Your data belongs to you, as a Canadian citizen or a Canadian resident, and when you put that data into another jurisdiction, it's actually subject to the laws of that jurisdiction," said Bohaker.

That means data that belongs to a Canadian but is stored in the U.S. can be collected by American law enforcement agencies without the requirements we're familiar with for things like probable cause.

One of Bohaker's colleagues dubbed the way things work as "a constitutional black hole."

"There's so much information today and it's being stored in these systems that make it easy to analyze," she said. "What will happen 10, 20, 30 years down the road? I think these are important questions to ask and until we have answers I think it's important to keep our data with the most privacy."

This is what happens to a lot of the data you save. It goes onto servers like these owned by DigitalOcean. CONTRIBUTED

STORAGE

What is it?

Cloud storage means outsourcing the storage of data to a third-party company. It's often cheaper and easier for businesses and organizations to do that than run servers themselves.

But there have long been privacy concerns about data held in foreign countries, particularly the U.S. where the majority of big cloud storage companies are based.

The Canadian government has recognized the problem. Microsoft announced this spring it plans to build two data centres in Canada, requested by the government to store its own data.

Teen stabbed at school

A 17-year-old boy was stabbed Wednesday at George S. Henry Academy, according to police. Paramedics arrived near York Mills and Don Mills roads around 11:20 a.m. and found the victim conscious and breathing with multiple stab wounds to the chest area.

He was transported to a local trauma centre in stable condition.

TDSB officials say the stabbing occurred on school property. Police are searching for a brown male suspect, about five-foot-five, wearing a black hoodie. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

FIREARMS

Armed shooting victim charged

The male victim involved in a shooting at Michael's on Simcoe last weekend has been charged with eight firearm-related offences.

Possession of a firearm with ammunition and possession of a firearm knowing its possession is unauthorized are among the charges.

According to police, 29-year-old Terry Nguyen was armed at the time of the shooting.

Police said the Toronto steakhouse shooting that left two people seriously injured was a targeted act.

Two masked men entered the restaurant and opened fire, hitting a man and woman in their late 20s.

Both victims were stabilized and are expected to survive.

Toronto police's guns and gangs unit continues to investigate.

Anyone with information is asked to contact police at 416-808-5200 or Crime Stoppers at 416-222-TIPS (8477).

Architects design a greener expressway

INFRASTRUCTURE

City receives two proposals to rebuild the Gardiner

Luke Simcoe
Metro | Toronto

Imagine a greener Gardiner.

That's what two groups of architects and planners are asking the city to do when it considers how best to rebuild the crumbling expressway.

The city's public works committee discussed a pair of "unsolicited" proposals this week for how best to tear down the Gardiner east of the Don River and build new ramps near Cherry Street.

One suggests rebuilding the portion of the Gardiner linking to the Don Valley Parkway on top of a massive earth berm, similar to where the highway crosses Park Lawn Road.

Paul Bedford, the city's former chief planner, said the so-called "viaduct" option is cheaper to build, and would create more green space along Lakeshore Drive.

"In addition, it would appear possible to construct the earth berm while the existing Gardiner remained in operation, thereby saving years of disruptive construction and extensive detours," Bedford said.

The second option, proposed by the Brook McIlroy architecture firm, shifts the Gardiner-DVP link north and runs the expressway along the Metrolinx rail corridor.

It also encloses the highway inside a massive elevated park.

"Instead of people looking on to an elevated expressway, by putting a roof on it and landscaping it you're now looking at an amenity, a green, beautiful linear park," said architect Calvin Brook.

Brook said his plan, actually called Green Gardiner, revives the extra green space that would have been created by removing the Gardiner — an option council narrowly rejected — while maintaining the functionality of the roadway.

The plan would also free up an additional eight acres of land for development, valued at an estimated $300 million. Brook estimates the cost of building the enclosed expressway at about $350 million.

"Putting the Gardiner over the rail corridor essentially pays for itself," he said.

The only obstacle is that the rail tracks are owned by the province, which would have to approve the plan, Brook said.

Durham officer fired for using excessive force

A Durham police officer has been fired after being found guilty of misconduct for using excessive force against a person in custody.

Const. Glen Turpin must leave the force immediately, retired Ontario Provincial Police superintendent Morris Elbers ruled at a police disciplinary hearing in Whitby on Wednesday.

Turpin had been suspended with pay since 2008 after two criminal trials for assaults against members of the public.

"It resonates loud and clear that Const. Turpin is a man that can get out of control when his authority is questioned. This is not and must not be the position of a police officer wearing the uniform," Elbers said.

Ian Johnstone, the prosecutor in the disciplinary tribunal, had argued for the officer's dismissal in a lengthy police disciplinary hearing.

> "We all make mistakes; however, this officer has crossed the line.
> Morris Elbers, retired OPP superintendent

"I think the message that comes out of the decision by Supt. Elbers is that the men and women who serve the community proudly, as Durham Regional Police officers, if in fact they dishonour and disgrace that uniform, they will be held accountable," Johnstone said after the hearing.

Turpin was charged with assaulting prisoners on two occasions in 2006 and 2007. He was convicted in one trial and acquitted by a jury at another trial. But the Court of Appeal overturned the conviction against Turpin, ordering a new trial, at which the officer pleaded guilty to threatening. He was granted a discharge.

Elbers ruled that Turpin needed to control his temper and his attitude while on active duty, and he had "failed to do so on numerous occasions."

Turpin, who was named Officer of the Year in 2002 and received an award of merit from the Canadian Police Association in 2006, has a history of disciplinary issues. In 1998, he was found to have used excessive force in the performance of his duties. He's also been penalized for failing to perform court-related duties. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

City may give green light to free Wi-Fi

TECHNOLOGY

We could change lives, says Coun. Josh Matlow

Luke Simcoe
Metro | Toronto

It took nine years, but the city may finally be ready to flip the switch on free wireless Internet.

A committee of city councillors has thrown unanimous support behind adding Wi-Fi hot spots to parks and Toronto Community Housing buildings. Full council will weigh in Sept. 30.

For Coun. Josh Matlow, who's been championing the cause, it's exciting that "reason" has finally prevailed. The city first flirted with free Wi-Fi in 2006, when the now-defunct Toronto Hydro Telecom began offering its One Zone service. The plan fizzled and lay dormant until 2013, when Matlow tried to revive it, but his effort didn't even make it past committee.

"The leadership of the previous committee … really bought into the unfounded concerns raised by the anti-Wi-Fi lobby," Matlow said. "But it was a very different reception this time around."

Matlow said the new committee, appointed by Mayor John Tory, understood that offering municipal Wi-Fi makes Toronto "a more tech-friendly city." He believes the plan will attract businesses and give people living in community housing a leg up.

"There are so many residents in TCH buildings who don't have access to high-speed Internet," Matlow said. "If we can provide the connectivity to employment and education, we could change lives."

While the TTC has slowly been rolling out free access underground, the city is a dead zone at street level. LIZ BEDDALL/METRO

ONTARIO RETIREMENT PLAN

Employers concerned over pension initiative

About 100 Ontario companies are expressing serious reservations" about the new provincial pension plan and its impact on jobs and the economy.

Employers including Maple Leaf Foods, Ford of Canada, Magna International, IBM and Union Gas signed a letter by the Ontario Chamber of Commerce urging the government to quickly clarify some details of the new pension plan.

The Ontario Retirement Pension Plan will require mandatory contributions from employers and workers at any company that does not already offer a workplace pension. Companies will have to pay premiums of 1.9 per cent for each employee, up to $1,643 a year, and the workers will pay an equal amount.

The Chamber of Commerce says the economic impact of the provincial pension remains the primary concern of employers, warning that 44 per cent of its members say they will reduce their payroll or hire fewer workers.

The Liberal government is required to provide a cost-benefit analysis of the plan by the end of the year.

"We strongly encourage the government to beat that deadline and release the results of its analysis before moving forward with further decisions on ORPP design parameters," wrote chamber president and CEO Allan O'Dette.

In the legislature Wednesday, the Progressive Conservatives said employers and employees alike need information now on the impact of the pension plan, which they warned could cost up to 40,000 jobs.

"We've had enough of feel-good emotional arguments and meetings around the province. We need data," said PC critic Julia Munro. "We need to know how many people will lose their jobs. We need to know how many more companies will shut their doors." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Small clubs: the big thing

CLUBBING

Richmond St.'s huge places go as technology shifts tastes

Author Denise Benson. JONNI SUPER PHOTOGRAPHY

A decade ago, the lines would snake for hours. Girls with platinum hair and push-up bras. Guys in white loafers and muscle shirts. You could hear the bass thumping, even from outside. It was Saturday night on Richmond Street and the clubs were bumping.

But yesterday's club district has fallen into eerie late-night calm, with rowdy clubs replaced by condos, clothing stores and, at best, smaller supper clubs.

"What is different now is that there are less venues and there are definitely less large venues," Denise Benson, author of Then & Now: Toronto Nightlife History.

The mega-club used to be a staple of Toronto's nightlife scene: sprawling venues, often with capacities of well over 1,000, each more or less indistinguishable from the next, and all blaring Top 40 tunes into the early hours. They were mostly located in the Entertainment District, along Richmond and Adelaide streets east and west of Spadina Avenue.

"The closing of a number of venues in the early to mid-2000s, to me, signals a serious change that we haven't entirely recovered from," Benson, a DJ and music journalist, says. This change meant the death of such venues as Turbo, System Soundbar and the outlying Guvernment.

Today, the one-size-fits-all Top 40 mega-club is more or less dead in Toronto. To experience that kind of relic from the past, you have to travel to new venues in Vaughan, like Avenue Nightclub and Ivy Social Club. Or visit the massive yet troubled Muzik Nightclub on the Exhibition grounds. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Wynne's Xmas gift is beer on grocers' shelves

Ontario will have supermarket six-packs in time for Christmas.

Premier Kathleen Wynne is playing Santa by promising that beer will be on grocery store shelves before the holidays.

"It is an exciting day for people who love beer in Ontario," the premier said Wednesday at the Mill Street Brew Pub in the Distillery District. "By December, the first 60 grocery stores will receive their authorization to sell beer in Ontario," said Wynne.

"Beer in grocery stores could be seen as a holiday present that many people in Ontario have been waiting for a long time," she said, adding the government did not want to "blow up" the existing distribution network because it is efficient both in terms of prices and recycling.

The first 60 grocery stores will receive their authorization to sell beer in Ontario by December, Premier Kathleen Wynne said Wednesday. As first disclosed by Torstar News Service, the changes stem from a 190-page agreement between Queen's Park and the Beer Store.

The first 60 grocery stores will receive their authorization to sell beer in Ontario by December, Premier Kathleen Wynne said Wednesday. "It is a complex thing in Ontario to sell beer, apparently," said Wynne, flanked by her privatization czar Ed Clark.

Clark, who will deliver his blueprint on expanding wine sales later this year, said the auction of licences among grocers should bring in about $10 million to provincial coffers. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Mideast artists bring shamstep style to Canada

Deena Douara
Metro | Toronto

With life reflecting their art, two of 47SOUL’s members did not receive their visas for the trip to Toronto. Their show will continue though with Z the People and Walaa Sbeit. CONTRIBUTED

Chamber pop, folktronica, crunkcore. It can be hard to coin a new style of music, but that’s not stopping 47SOUL from trying.

Their style, shamstep — making its North American debut tonight at Lula Lounge — is better experienced than explained, but picture an outdoor wedding celebration in the Mideast that’s been suddenly forced into a nightclub. “El Sham” in Arabic commonly refers to the region encompassing Syria, Jordan, Lebanon and Palestine.

“The great reaction shown through energetic dancing has been remarkable; showing without a doubt that music in general, and specifically shamstep, is borderless,” says band manager Fadi Haddadeen.

47SOUL’s musicians are all sons of Palestinian refugees who held different travel documents and addresses. After shared online admiration for each others’ talents, they committed to collaborate in London, England — one of few options available, explains Hamza Arnaout (also known as El Jehaz).

“We have a very difficult border issue in the Middle East and since we all come from different places it was a nightmare finding a city or country that would take the four of us,” he said.

Borrowing from Arabic scales and instruments, they layer analog synthesizers and electronic sounds, creating hypnotic dabke beats that come together as “electro-mijwez” (an Arab reed instrument), “shamstep,” and choubi (Iraqi-style folk music).

The final layer, the lyrics, is what packs the most punch. In Arabic and English, they sing and rap of love and humour, but mostly of the struggle for freedom and equality.

It’s been a banner year for the group. They’ve hit Glastonbury and Bestival and their stop here launches both the Toronto Palestine Film Festival and the Small World Music Festival.

TORONTO PALESTINE FILM FESTIVAL

‘News screens don’t tell the whole story’

Animated cows deemed a security threat. Refugees disguised as a wedding party. Young survivors of the Gaza beach bombing.

They’re a few of the stories that will be told at this year’s Toronto Palestine Film Festival. The common thread across the four days of documentaries, shorts and feature films is “excellent storytelling,” punctuated with humour, said organizer Dania Majid.

Despite inflammatory events occurring in Jerusalem, Majid said the festival has always been about culture.

“News screens don’t tell the whole story,” she said. “We see ourselves as a vehicle … to highlight and showcase all aspects of Palestinian culture.”

When the festival launched seven years ago, there weren’t as many Palestinian-led films to choose from, Majid admitted. The growth of similar festivals, however, has made directing a viable option for Palestinians, many of whom have been lauded internationally.

Performance art, music and cuisine — “such an important part of the culture” — are also featured on the lineup.

TPFF starts Thursday.

DEENA DOUARA/METRO

SMALL WORLD MUSIC FESTIVAL

“You can cross cultural boundaries more easily with music or food than anything.” It may be a well-worn trope, but the director of Small World Music Festival has witnessed “the capacity to change perception” firsthand.

Alan Davis created the festival in ‘97 with a desire to showcase “master musicians” with little exposure beyond restaurant backrooms.

“One hopes that (Torontonians) experience each other’s cultures and that remains the goal and it remains the struggle,” says Davis.

SWMF starts Thursday, featuring talents from Ethiopia, Korea, Mali and Estonia. “It’s a smorgasbord of goodies.”

Whether you want to shoot a web series, take some portraits or cut a record, a new service is helping Torontonians make creative use of space.

Spacefy launched last week and connects people like photographers and filmmakers with people who own interesting spaces.

“It could be an estate in Forest Hill or a barn in Caledon,” said co-founder Alyas Ali. “If you use it right, any space can be used creatively.

“A perfect example is a bar. From Thursday to Sunday, it’s busy, but on the other days of the week, not much is going on. So, monetizing that underused space can be pretty appealing.”

Photographer Nick Merzetti was one of Spacefy’s beta users. He said finding the right space in Toronto is an “unending” challenge.

He’s already used Spacefy to book one photo shoot and has two more coming down the pipe.

“I had someone ask me to do a shoot in a laundromat, of all places, and on Spacefy, there’s a guy offering his awesome retro laundromat, and he’s not charging much at all,” he said.

Ali hopes Spacefy will appeal to people looking to make some extra cash by renting out their homes to film crews. Rates on the site range anywhere from $20 an hour to $10,000 a day.

“If it’s a big film, and they need a lot of space for a crew, they’ll have a budget for thousands a day,” he said. “But if it’s a couple of guys shooting with some Canon 5Ds, their budget is going to be a little different.”

Mayor calls for halt to Peel street checks

DATA

Black people three times more likely to be carded

Black people in Brampton and Mississauga are three times more likely to be stopped by Peel police than white people, according to six years of data obtained by the Torstar News Service.

The race-based data pertains to street checks, known as carding in Toronto, conducted in the two cities from 2009 to 2014.

Black people accounted for 21 per cent of street checks conducted in Brampton and Mississauga. According to census data from 2011, nine per cent of Brampton's and Mississauga's total population was black. Whites made up 41 per cent of the population and accounted for 28 per cent of the street checks.

Mississauga Mayor Bonnie Crombie says she will now call for the suspension of street checks by Peel police, after learning of the race data from Torstar. Crombie, who sits on the Peel Police Services Board, in June pushed for a full review of the force's street-check practices.

"During the next meeting of the Peel Police Services Board, which will take place Friday, Sept. 25, I will call for a suspension of street checks to best ensure we have a thorough review and analysis of the practice, and have a better understanding of its scope and scale," Crombie told Torstar Wednesday.

> Bonnie Crombie

"With the release of this new data, along with the feedback I heard from (residents) at a recent public consultation, I believe there are serious issues that need to be addressed."

Crombie said she understands the need for police to have crime-fighting tools, but said citizens cannot have their rights infringed upon.

Lawyer Howard Morton said he's not surprised by the race data on Peel's street-check practices.

"If (Torstar) hadn't looked closely at Toronto, which had a similarly disproportionate number of black people being carded, this would come as a surprise in Peel," said Morton, a member of the Law Union of Ontario.

He and his group have been staunch critics of carding, arguing that the practice violates Charter of Rights protections against unlawful search and seizure and detention.

"But what is surprising is that Peel's (police) board has never dealt with this," Morton said.

Peel police Chief Jennifer Evans has defended the practice as an important tool to help solve crimes.

Evans was asked Wednesday how many crimes her force has solved with the help of street-check data, but no information was provided to Torstar.

Buddy benches catch on

SCHOOLS

They're go-to spots for kids seeking friendship

Owen Stewart likes to play soccer at recess, but for part of Grade 3 he had no one to play with. For the third time in six years, the eight-year old followed his mother to a new city, a new school and had to make new pals.

One afternoon, Owen stood alone in the schoolyard next to a bench and kicked his ball against a wall. He didn't have to wait long before another boy spotted him near the "buddy bench" and joined in.

The 475 students of Rick Hansen Public School in Aurora know the bench as the go-to spot for lonely kids seeking a friend.

Across the country and south of the border, schools are experimenting with buddy benches to make playgrounds more welcoming. In just the past month, news outlets in Ohio, North Carolina and Connecticut reported that local schools are turning to buddy benches to encourage kids to play nice.

Ben Irvine, who has changed school three times in six years, credits the 'buddy bench' for making friends at Rick Hansen Public School in Aurora. AARON HARRIS/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

In Owen's case, at least, it has helped. At former schools, he's been so lonely his mother said she considered leaving work to keep him company.

> It's scary asking people if you can play.
> Rachel Stewart

"As a parent, it's heartbreaking," she said. "As a child, it's scary asking people if you can play. Childhood friendships, they change. Kids like to play with someone else, and you're often left feeling lonely, embarrassed and just really shy."

Owen's mother says her son has stopped lamenting a lack of friends. Rachel Stewart learned about the bench one day as she walked through the playground with Owen after school.

Stewart liked the idea of a buddy bench so much that she started a crowd-funding campaign to equip more Ontario schools with one. Since last Friday, she has raised $2,200, and the Facebook page she made to spread the word has more than 12,000 likes.

It's caught on because everyone can remember how they felt as the new kid at school, she speculated.

Owen's school installed the ordinary-looking bench a year and a half ago, according to the school's principal, Steven Gardner.

Some teachers were skeptical at first, thinking that it could make lonely students feel even more alone. But the bench has fulfilled its purpose and become a gathering spot for kids who want to make bracelets, draw or play with Pokémon cards, he said.

BIG-CITY MAYORS

Housing pledges sought

A half-dozen big-city mayors are huddling in Toronto to crank up pressure on federal parties to help cities struggling with social housing costs.

"We need help — this is a need approaching a crisis," Edmonton Mayor Don Iveson said en route to Toronto for Thursday's meeting with Mayor John Tory, Vancouver's Gregor Robertson, Halifax's Mike Savage, Kitchener's Berry Vrbanovic and London's Matt Brown.

Since big-city mayors kicked off their urban issues pressure campaign in Toronto last February, the Conservative, NDP, Liberal and Green parties have all made pledges on social and/or affordable housing.

"My sense is there is still time for each of them to do a little more," Tory said.

Toronto expects that almost 60,000 of its social housing units will require $2.6 billion in repairs over the next decade. Operating costs for Toronto Community Housing are about $400 million a year.

READY TO ENGAGE

Metro's coast-to-coast daily election series connects young, urban Canadians to the issues they care about

VOTER PROFILE

Name: Melanie Hnatyshyn Age: 31 Riding: Calgary Centre
Her issues: Refugees, energy, education, Senate reform

Pondering change in Conservative country

ROSEMARY WESTWOOD
in Calgary

Melanie Hnatyshyn sits in the shadows of dozens of glassy downtown-Calgary highrises, in the financial heart of the oil industry, in a riding that's voted some shade of conservative blue for decades, and ponders change.

"I would say, yeah, I would say we need change. Sometimes just a new face, just maybe a new leader," she says, almost with a note of surprise.

Her tone is understandable, given the entrenched views of a city where, as she describes it, many inherit politics like they inherit family heirlooms.

Hnatyshyn (the "H" is silent) was born in Winnipeg and moved to Calgary for university. At 31, well into her career — she's a development engineer for a major energy company — and despite Calgary's progressive mayor, Naheed Nenshi, Hnatyshyn says some of her friends are wary of discussing alternate political views in a culture attached to the idea that federal right-wing politics are best for business.

"They feel like they can't maybe openly discuss things with the typical person in Calgary. That Conservative majority is just so prevalent."

Hnatyshyn hasn't decided who to vote for, or whether she's willing to vote strategically, but she has a shortlist of issues she's watching.

The first is the refugee crisis. She's heard how many Syrians the various leaders propose to bring in, but wants more detail on the plans, and fuller explanation of the Conservatives' response thus far. "If it's driven by economics and budget, it'd be nice if they explained that," she says.

A pragmatist and self-identified planner, Hnatyshyn's also looking for a party with a well-rounded vision for the future of the energy industry — one that offers more stability. "In the U.S., they're not as affected by the low oil prices as we are in Canada. They're trying to be energy independent and have a long-term view and have secure jobs, whereas Canada seems to be at the whim of the fluctuations of oil and gas market prices."

She'd also like politicians to tackle the imbalance between university costs and employment prospects. She'd like to see a strategic, and once again, long-term look at education and how to better funnel young people into paths that offer prospects, instead of joblessness or low-skilled work.

She mentions, finally, the tangled issue of Senate reform. She watched spokespeople for the three major parties discuss the subject on the news the other day.

"It seemed like all of them wanted to do something about reforming the Senate, but no one was holding themselves to any promises. You feel like if nobody's going to take a stand on the Senate, what does that say about all the parties? Politics on top of politics."

Aside from what each party is saying they'll do, Hnatyshyn is also trying to figure out how much she can trust politicians to deliver. She wonders about the Conservatives' about-face on fast-tracking Syrian refugees. But it's also informing her voting strategy. "Keep your mind open, because I don't know, maybe some of the parties will be more flexible depending on what they think people want to hear, right up until the election."

Rosemary Westwood is travelling across the country talking to young voters. Tomorrow she's in Edmonton.

Arts 'ignored' on economic stage

POLICY

Funding cuts prevail despite surge in GDP

Stephanie Taylor
Metro | Halifax

A familiar cloud of disappointment settles in for George Pothitos in what's shaping up to be yet another federal election with little mention of the arts on Canada's economic stage.

While the prime ministerial hopefuls travel the country, shaking hands and promising new economic growth, the award-winning artistic director of Neptune Theatre in Halifax busies himself with the latest production of the classic, Great Expectations.

But when the soft-spoken Pothitos sits down to discuss what's at stake when funding for the arts is largely ignored from the policy agenda, he pleads a business case, not a poem.

"We're not some handout," he says.

"The perception that it's charity has to cease. We have to look at (arts) as an investment."

In the past nine years, Pothitos says, the theatre's funding from the Canada Council for the Arts has been cut as the pool of money remains stagnant.

Arts and culture funding briefly flared up as an election issue in 2008 in response to the Conservatives having made nearly $45 million in cuts.

Performers appear on stage at Halifax's Neptune Theatre.
JEFF HARPER/METRO FILE

Pothitos believes that's ironic, considering the $7.37 million the theatre and its patrons — who dined at nearby restaurants, bars, and doled out cash at other businesses — pumped into Nova Scotia's economy during the 2013-14 season, according to the theatre's latest economic-impact study.

> Sometimes giving money to the CBC and to Canada Council isn't quite enough.
> George Pothitos

Another report, by the Canadian Arts Coalition, claims the arts sector was responsible for $48 billion dollars' worth of GDP in 2010, and employed 650,000 people across the country — just under four per cent of the country's total employment.

"It's typical to see the arts more or less ignored, for some reason," explains Jeff MacLeod, a professor of political studies at Mount Saint Vincent University.

Leaders of all political stripes "don't embrace (arts), they don't see it reflected in the population or the electorate, he says, "so there's no political gain; therefore, it dies from policy neglect."

Earlier this week, Liberal leader Justin Trudeau announced that investment in the Canada Council for the Arts would double to $360 million per year under a Liberal government, with $150 million extra invested in CBC/Radio Canada.

But, Pothitos says, "sometimes giving money to the CBC and to Canada Council isn't quite enough."

MacLeod agrees, explaining that a truly healthy arts policy would devise ways to nurture a base of creative minds. One idea he offers is a national strategy to hire art teachers in schools.

The risk, he warns, is a loss of Canadian culture itself.

EGYPT

Imprisoned Canadian granted pardon

Nearly two years after his arrest in Egypt on widely denounced terrorism charges, Canadian journalist Mohamed Fahmy walked out of prison a free man on Wednesday, following a presidential pardon.

Fahmy and his colleague and co-accused Baher Mohamed were among 100 people — including dozens of prominent human rights activists — pardoned by President Abdel-Fattah el-Sissi.

"I am free! This time for real! Cops dropped me at CAC my old high school in my prison garb. Party Time! #FreeAJStaff" Fahmy tweeted moments after his release.

Speaking later to reporters, Fahmy said he still "can't believe it."

"We have not digested the fact that we are free; we don't have to worry about anything else," he said. "Our families have suffered so much since the beginning of this trial and we're very happy that el-Sissi took this action and released us."

His wife, Marwa Omara, said she was visiting Fahmy in prison when she learned the news of his pardon from a TV set that was on.

"I was scared for his health from too much joy," she said, adding that the first thing they plan to do is have a large wedding party to celebrate their recent marriage.

Fahmy's lawyer said she was delighted that the journalist was finally free.

"It has been a long ordeal, and we are grateful to President Sissi for exercising his power to pardon the two journalists," Amal Clooney said in a statement.

ELECTION 2015

Mulcair clarifies his stance on niqabs

NDP Leader Tom Mulcair is urging tolerance and a calmer discussion about face coverings when applying for Canadian citizenship.

In a speech Wednesday, he said he backs a requirement that women show their faces at some point in the citizenship process — but not at the citizenship ceremony, as the Conservatives would hope.

"I understand that many view the niqab as a symbol of the oppression of women.

"And on that, let me be clear: No one has the right to tell a woman what she must — or must not — wear," Mulcair said.

"I am in agreement with the existing rule under which anyone seeking citizenship must uncover their face to identify themselves before swearing the oath, in accordance with their religious beliefs."

The Conservatives want women to be required to show their faces not only at a point during the process of applying for citizenship, but also during the citizenship ceremony itself.

The federal government is fighting a court ruling that threw out the requirement for uncovered faces at citizenship ceremonies.

> No one has the right to tell a woman what she must — or must not — wear.
> NDP Leader Tom Mulcair

Mulcair's speech comes a day before a leaders' debate in Montreal and was organized at the last minute in a bid to clarify the NDP position on the veil. The issue is particularly controversial in Quebec, the NDP's main support base.

The federal government is fighting a court ruling that threw out the requirement for uncovered faces at citizenship ceremonies. The government is seeking to take that Federal Court of Appeal decision to the Supreme Court of Canada and wants the decision stayed while it appeals.

Teaching position awaits at UBC

When Canadian journalist Mohamed Fahmy returns to Canada, he will take up a position as an adjunct professor at the University of British Columbia, the school announced Wednesday.

"We look forward to welcoming him to UBC's Vancouver campus this fall," interim president Martha Piper said in a news release Wednesday. "Mohamed's resiliency during this ordeal is an inspiration to us all."

Fahmy will share his experiences with students on the state of the Middle East as a journalist-in-residence at the university's Global Reporting Centre. He will also be a visiting fellow at the W. Maurice Young Centre for Applied Ethics.

He is writing a book about his experiences.

While it's unclear when Fahmy will return to Canada, Joanna Gislason, his lawyer in Vancouver, said her client is eager to get back on home soil.

School test changing after aboriginal stereotypes found

An achievement test used in Canadian schools is being changed after a student in Saskatoon noticed that some of the options in multiple choice questions included negative stereotypes about aboriginal people.

The exam recently given to Grade 10 students in Saskatoon public schools included two questions "where the available multiple-choice options included two incorrect answers which were negative stereotypes about aboriginal people."

School spokesman Rod Drabble says the answers said aboriginal people have a "lack of interest and motivation" and many aboriginals are unemployed.

A student writing the Level 19 test book of the Canadian Achievement Tests, Fourth Edition, told a parent and it was brought to the attention of the school board and division administrators.

> Why are questions like this included on there? Why wasn't it a question about a First Nation doctor ... or a success story of that?
> Chris Scribe, Indian Teacher Education Program

Drabble says the school system has stopped using that test until further notice and has notified the Canadian Test Centre.

David Galati, director of operations for the Canadian Test Centre, says the answers will be changed in any Level 19 test books sent out from now on.

"I was surprised and disappointed to see that our internal review of test items during the development of CAT4 did not identify these two test items and replace them before publication," Galati said in an email.

"This is the first time anyone has brought this concern to my attention, but Level 19 is not as widely used as our other test levels."

Rape-kit bag left in doorway

PATRICK KANE CASE

Lawyer for accuser alleges evidence tampering

The lawyer for a woman alleging she was sexually assaulted by Chicago Blackhawks forward Patrick Kane said Wednesday that an empty evidence bag was improperly left in the doorway of the woman's mother's home.

Thomas Eoannou said the bag at one point contained the rape kit used when the woman reported that she had been assaulted.

"Something seriously has gone amiss," Eoannou said.

Eoannou said the mother made the bizarre discovery when she came home from work for lunch on Tuesday afternoon. She found the bag folded up between a storm door and her front door, he said. "It could have been there a day and a half," he said, because the woman used the back door when she left for work that morning.

He said the bag is authentic, labelled with personal identifying information for the woman, details on where the rape kit was used and the initials of the nurses who administered the kit.

"I have never seen an evidence bag outside of a police lab, a prosecutor's office or a court room, let alone find one in a doorway of a rape victim's mother's home," he said.

Eoannou said he wants the FBI or state police to probe how the bag left the custody of investigators. It's not clear how the bag got to the mother's home or what effect it may have on the investigation, he said.

"We're hoping to find out how this happened and who had the incentive to modify or tamper with the evidence," he said. Eoannou said he hoped the person who delivered the bag would come forward.

Police have been investigating since the alleged Aug. 2 incident at Kane's off-season home in suburban Buffalo. Kane has not been charged.

Kane did not travel to Detroit with the rest of his team on Wednesday.

DATA BREACH

U.S. thinks hackers are from China

The number of people applying for or receiving security clearances whose fingerprint images were stolen in one of the worst U.S. government data breaches is now believed to be 5.6 million, not 1.1 million as first thought, the Office of Personnel Management announced Wednesday.

The agency was the victim of what the U.S. believes was a Chinese espionage operation that affected an estimated 21.5 million current and former federal employees or job applicants. The theft could give Chinese intelligence a huge leg up in recruiting informants inside the U.S. government, experts believe. It also could help the Chinese identify U.S. spies abroad, according to American officials. The White House has said it's going to discuss cybersecurity with Chinese President Xi Jinping when he visits President Barack Obama later this week.

EU chief urges end to 'chaos'

REFUGEE CRISIS

Squabbling nations told to co-operate, secure borders

European Union President Donald Tusk urged divided EU nations to set aside their differences and work together to secure the bloc's borders as Europe struggles with its biggest refugee emergency in decades.

About half a million people have fled to Europe so far this year in search of sanctuary or jobs. As numbers swell, nations have tightened border security. Hungary has a razor-wire fence along its border with Serbia.

Countries in eastern Europe with little recent experience of migration are trading barbs over who is to blame, while Balkans neighbours Serbia and Croatia — who were at war in the early 1990s — issued threats and ultimatums.

> The current 'migration policy' is a sum of despair of the victims fleeing war and persecution ... of the cynicism of the smuggler.
> European Union President Donald Tusk

"We must prepare a concrete plan, which must finally appear in place of the arguments and the chaos we have witnessed in the last weeks," Tusk told reporters before chairing the summit.

"The most urgent question we should ask ourselves tonight is how to regain control of our external borders. Otherwise it does not make sense to even speak of a common European migration policy."

As the leaders headed to Brussels, a further 5,000 migrants were converging on the Austrian border with Hungary, police said.

Serbia, meanwhile, gave EU member Croatia an ultimatum to reopen its border for all cargo transport by midnight Wednesday or face unspecified retaliation.

Among the outstanding issues that Tusk, the summit's official host, wants addressed is increasing assistance to EU member nations that are receiving the brunt of the refugee influx, and improving co-operation with non-EU countries in the Balkans and Turkey, which is now home to almost two million migrants — many of whom have fled Syria's civil war.

Tusk also wants to discuss diplomatic efforts to end the Syria conflict. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

War-weary Iraq is struggling with a growing cholera outbreak.

As of Tuesday, at least 54 cases had been confirmed in Baghdad, as well as in the southern provinces of Najaf, Diwaniyah, Babil and Samawah, a Health Ministry spokesman said.

MIDDLE EAST

Syrian rebels fear defection

U.S.-trained rebels who recently returned to Syria said Wednesday they have lost contact with one of their officers and that they are investigating reports that he defected and handed over his weapons to al-Qaida's branch in the country.

The U.S. military said it had no indication that any U.S.-trained fighters have defected.

The allegations come only days after the group of about 70 rebels returned to Syria after training in Turkey as part of the U.S. program to train and equip rebels to take part in the fight against the Islamic State group.

Defection among the ranks of U.S.-trained rebels would be an embarrassment to the program, which has already been criticized as offering too little too late and failing to provide enough protection for those trained rebels once inside Syria. The selected rebels are said to undergo a thorough vetting process.

U.S. officials have begun an overhaul of the efforts, including suggesting that the newly trained fighters operate as the New Syrian Forces, or NSF, alongside Syrian Kurds, Sunni Arab and other anti-Islamic State forces.

The U.S. Central Command confirmed Monday the graduates have re-entered Syria with their weapons and equipment and were to operate alongside existing western-allied forces.

Navy Capt. Jeff Davis, a Pentagon spokesman, said any accounts of a defection are "patently false." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SKY WATCH

Moon to put on a rare double

Get ready for a rare double feature this weekend, starring our very own moon.

A total lunar eclipse will share the stage with a so-called supermoon Sunday night or early Monday, depending where you are. That combination hasn't been seen since 1982 and won't happen again until 2033.

When a full or new moon makes its closest approach to Earth, that's a supermoon. Although still about 220,000 miles away, this full moon will look bigger and brighter than usual. In fact, it will be the closest full moon of the year, about 30,000 miles closer than the average distance. (The moon's orbit is far from a perfect circle.)

2018

There won't be another total lunar eclipse until 2018.

The full eclipse of the moon will last more than an hour and be visible, weather permitting, from North and South America, Europe, Africa and western Asia.

This weekend's eclipse marks the end of a tetrad, or series of four total lunar eclipses set six months apart. This series began in April 2014.

The 21st century will see eight of these tetrads, an uncommonly good run. From 1600 to 1900, there were none. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COPYRIGHT LAW

Birthday song free for all

The music publishing company that has been collecting royalties on the song Happy Birthday To You for years does not hold a valid copyright on the lyrics to the tune that is one of the mostly widely sung in the world, a U.S. judge ruled.

U.S. District Judge George H. King determined the song's original copyright, obtained by the Clayton F. Summy Co. from the song's writers, covered only the tune's musical arrangement and not the lyrics.

"Because Summy Co. never acquired the rights to the 'Happy Birthday' lyrics, defendants, as Summy Co.'s purported successors-in-interest, do not own a valid copyright."

The lawsuit was filed two years ago by Good Morning To You Productions Corp., which challenged the copyright now held by Warner/Chappell Music Inc., arguing that the song should be "dedicated to public use and in the public domain."

Ad blockers hit revenues

INTERNET

Websites worry commercials could vanish like pop-ups

When you visit a website, you often find yourself waiting and waiting for advertisements to load. It doesn't have to be this way. There are easy ways to block such annoyances, and Apple is now permitting apps that block ads in its Web browser for iPhones and iPads.

All this might help users navigate, but it also threatens the livelihood of websites and publishers that depend heavily on advertising revenue — companies like Google, Hulu and The New York Times. While the rise in ad blocking isn't causing panic yet, publishers and content creators are watching.

Already, some websites are taking steps to reduce the annoyance so users won't turn to ad blockers.

"It is possible to be too alarmist about ad blockers, but it's a very real phenomenon," said Joshua Benton, director of the Nieman Journalism Lab at Harvard University.

It's one thing if just five per cent of iPhone users install an ad blocker; it's another if 80 per cent do, Benton said. If today's ad practices get too annoying, he said, they could disappear just like pop-up windows, which many browsers now block automatically in response to consumers' annoyance with them.

PageFair, a firm that seeks to counter ad blockers, says worldwide usage of ad blockers grew 41 per cent from last year to nearly 200 million people.

Programs that block advertisements in browsers are threatening the livelihood of those that depend heavily on advertising revenue. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS FILE

That's six per cent of Internet users worldwide, including 16 per cent in the U.S., 37 per cent in Greece and 25 per cent in Germany. PageFair estimates these tools will block nearly $22 billion US in ad revenue this year and $41 billion US next year.

The threats to websites are about to get bigger. The ability to block ads, long available on traditional computers, arrived on Apple's mobile devices with a recent software update, iOS 9.

Google's Android system also allows ad blockers in Web browsers such as Firefox, as long as they don't affect unrelated apps.

Many websites already have countermeasures for ad blockers. Hulu, for instance, simply replaces commercials with an unskippable message.

Meanwhile, some companies are paying developers of ad blockers such as Adblock Plus for the right to bypass them. Companies that benefit a lot from search ads, like Google and Microsoft, pay for the privilege, the Financial Times reported.

VW scandal could kill diesel

Over the past 20 years, diesel's image has experienced an extreme makeover, going from the dirty, industry fuel used to power polluting trucks and buses to a potential short-term solution to preserving current oil supplies without compromising on performance, driving dynamics and crucially, air pollution.

But that was before the current situation at Volkswagen — which is accused of using software to cheat on U.S. emissions tests on its TDI diesel powerplants — became front-page news around the world.

Although diesel is a niche market in the U.S., accounting for just two per cent of new car sales, VW was the biggest player and its cars were developing a loyal, environmentally conscious following.

VW and consequently the current system of emissions certification will be investigated by the U.S. Congress's Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee.

Diesel is more efficient than gasoline — it has a higher energy content per litre and more of that energy is converted successfully during combustion resulting in 20 per cent less CO_2 emissions than an equivalent gasoline car. However, diesels emit more NOx (Nitrogen Oxide).

The Clean Air Act in the U.S. and the new Euro 6 standard in the EU are meant to tackle that issue by ensuring new cars emit NOx levels almost on a par with gasoline, but if U.S. testers can be tricked, how can European consumers be sure that they're not being greenwashed, too? AFP

CHANTAL HÉBERT: ON THE LEADERS' FACEOFF IN FRENCH

"Thomas Mulcair has more to lose than gain in Thursday's debate ... a commanding lead in Quebec is mostly what has kept the New Democrats in the game.

With his party's competitive position in national voting intentions hanging by a Quebec thread, NDP Leader Thomas Mulcair has more to lose than to gain in Thursday's French-language debate.

Since the campaign began, a commanding lead in Quebec is mostly what has kept the New Democrats in the game. But the status of front-runner comes at a price, and Mulcair will spend the first French-language debate of the campaign on the hot seat.

He absolutely needs to keep alive the prospect of a second Quebec orange wave. Absent a strong showing in the province's polls, the NDP's carefully constructed bid for power could crumble like a house of cards.

The party's narrative hangs on the notion that the New Democrats are best placed to beat the Conservatives next month. On the way to this week's French-language debate, that contention has been sorely tested.

If all had gone according to plan for the NDP, Justin Trudeau would no longer be a realistic contender for prime minister. With the Liberals lagging too far behind to have a shot at winning the election and the help of a cautious platform there would be an NDP wave in the making in Ontario.

So far, neither has happened.

Eight weeks and two English-language debates later — including one on the central issue of the economy — the Liberal leader is still standing and his party has gained more ground in public opinion, in particular in Ontario, than the NDP.

At this juncture, a slide in NDP support in Quebec could lead to a hemorrhage of support in other regions of the country as non-conservative voters coalesce behind the stronger opposition option.

Until this week, the main liability Mulcair was expected to take in the French-language debate was his support for the Energy East pipeline. That stance pits him against Green Party Leader Elizabeth May and Bloc Québécois Leader Gilles Duceppe, and it does not play well with Quebec's environmental activists.

But now the NDP leader is coming to the debate with a much larger target on his back.

In Quebec, the debate over whether Muslim women should be required to uncover their faces to take the oath of citizenship has given a moribund Bloc campaign a bit of a kiss of life.

Support for a veil ban runs high in Quebec. In the national assembly, a Liberal move to ban face coverings for public servants and for anyone using provincial government services enjoys multi-party support.

The NDP is not alone in opposing a niqab ban. So do the Liberals. But because the Bloc and the New Democrats fish in the same nationalist pool of francophone voters, Duceppe's attacks have focused on Mulcair.

Anecdotal and recent polling evidence suggest they are taking a toll.

At this juncture, the NDP's best hope of riding out the niqab controversy would be for the election conversation to move on to other topics. But with not one but two French-language debates on the agenda of the next two weeks and with the help of Bloc and Conservative ads, the niqab issue could be on the Quebec radar to stay.

A good debate for Duceppe on Thursday would be good news for Harper and Trudeau.

Every vote that the Bloc takes back from the NDP helps the Liberals and the Conservatives in their own local battles against the New Democrat tide.

The NDP has owned Quebec since the beginning of the campaign, but that could still change. Past history shows that the debates tend to focus Quebecers on their election choices — sometimes with unexpected results.

When he arrived on the set of the French-language debate in the last election, Duceppe had cause to believe he was bulletproof. His party was sitting on its usual comfortable lead. As the only Quebec leader on the set, he had the home advantage.

So widespread were those assumptions that those who covered the 2011 French-language debate did not come away with the impression that it had been a watershed moment.

A few days later, the NDP jumped in the lead in Quebec, and never looked back.

This year, the roles are reversed, with Mulcair the leader to beat and Duceppe the one to watch.

THE MICROTREND: Mile-high mudras

The science is in: Sitting, especially for a long time (such as on a long-haul flight), is seriously risky to your health. But stretching can help, and it's not a stretch from that to full-blown yoga at 40,000 feet. The practice has taken off, not least because it can relieve stiffness and stress, and possibly reduce the risk of blood clots, which are associated with being sedentary for long periods. The craze has taken flight on the photo-sharing site Instagram. Even celebrities have posted snaps of themselves doing various contortions in the centre aisle in first class. The SkyTeam group of airlines has responded by adding yoga videos, designed to be done sitting, to its in-flight entertainment system — a definite advantage over sticking your stocking feet in your seatmates' face as you try to execute airplane pose while cruising over the Atlantic.

If you can make meet-the-teacher night, great. No? Don't panic.

Catherine Little
For Metro

When I started teaching in the early 1990s, I was young. And I looked young. Very young. A rumour started to circulate that I had gone to university as a tween and was actually 13 years old.

I had an excellent start to my first year and no issues with the nearly 200 junior high school students I taught. However, as September drew to a close, I could tell the vice-principal worried about how I would do at meet-the-teacher night. Parents might equate my youth to inexperience or, worse, incompetence.

Meet-the-teacher, also known as curriculum night, usually happens at the end of September. Most involve barbecues, sitting on too-small chairs and being told not to ask specific questions about your own child.

This year in public schools in Ontario, these nights may be a casualty of the ongoing strife between the Elementary Teachers Association of Ontario and the provincial government. Similar job action by teachers has taken place all over the country, and there will likely be more of the same.

As far as academic success goes, the research seems to indicate that events like meet-the-teacher are nice, but not a necessity. The authors of a 2014 study in Child Development looked at parents' activities, including parent–teacher conferences and volunteering at school. They found no evidence that doing these things directly affected academic achievement. They did say they felt there might be some emotional benefit — essentially, it's good for children to know their parents care.

Similarly, an analysis of 37 studies that included over 80,000 students from kindergarten to Grade 12 in Educational Research Review found that parent participation in school activities had the least effect on student achievement. What had the most? Parental expectations, discussions of school activities with children and helping with reading topped the list.

So, if meet-the-teacher happens this year and fits into your schedule, great. If not, don't panic. Other things you can do will help more.

I have no idea who showed up to meet me that September evening my first year teaching. I do remember that my vice-principal sent an experienced teacher to stand at the back of my room in case I needed help. I didn't. But it was nice to know someone was there if I did — kind of like the message you send by having clear expectations for your child and discussing school activities with them.

Full disclosure: As a parent, I have attended every curriculum night since my son started kindergarten, and I intend to attend this year if there is one. Even though my son is starting Grade 8, I want to see the person he's about to spend more waking hours with than anyone else.

150 YEARS IN Wonderland

The "meaning" of Alice's Adventures in Wonderland has been open to speculation for years: social satire, Oxford history, even a drug-induced hallucination. In honour of Alice's 150th anniversary, writer David Day is out with a comprehensive book that "decodes" Alice. He interprets a few for us here. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Illustrating Alice

"Scott (CS) Richardson, who designed the book, came up with this idea of doing these full spreads and using quotations. And he was the one who chose them ... (The illustrations) are all from the original Alice and what he's done is added a colour dimension and a quotation," says Day.

The Cover

You'll notice, when you're holding the book, that the figure of Alice on the front cover is pixilated, while the heart in the middle is clear and strong. In fact, it was designed that way for a number of reasons: if you look at it from far away (as you would in a bookstore display) the Alice is clear — it's only when you get closer that she loses her definition. "We pixilated it with the idea of decoding him," says Day, referring to author Lewis Carroll.

Crinoline Croquet

When Alice goes into the Queen's garden, that garden is based on Alice Liddell's house at Oxford — they had a croquet lawn at the back, which was the height of fashion at the time. Alice's mother made Croquet the centre of social life: "They frequently had these croquet parties, " says Day, "and all the women dressed up elaborately; it was the age of 'crinoline croquet.'"

Oracle of Delphi

This is a painting entitled Consulting the Oracle by John William Waterhouse. In Wonderland's Duchess' kitchen, Day explains that Carroll has created a parody of the Oracle of Delphi gone badly wrong. Instead of a high priestess who inhales fragrant vapours that inspire sacred prophecies, Wonderland's Ugly Duchess inhales smoke and pepper that inspires nonsense.

The Real Alice

"These photos are by Julia Margaret Cameron ... she would dress (Alice and her sisters) up as mythological figures." On the left, Alice is dressed as Aletheia, the Greek goddess of truth; on the right as Pomona, Roman goddess of fruitfulness.

Cheshire Cat

All the inhabitants of Wonderland, Day maintains, had real-life counterparts in Oxford Society. In this picture, the Cheshire Cat represents Christ Church college's Canon Edward Bouverie Pusey (puss, get it?) who was one of the most influential churchmen of his time. Conservative Puseyites opposed liberal reforms introduced by Alice's father, the Dean of Christ Church. Here the King and Queen of Hearts, who Day reveals as the Dean and Mrs. Liddell, are much annoyed by Canon Pusey's avatar.

Author faces off against Cage critics

FANDOM

Defending the actor only made Gibb love him more

Sue Carter
For Metro Canada

Author Lindsay Gibb believes Nicolas Cage is one of the most divisive actors of our generation. HANDOUT IMAGES

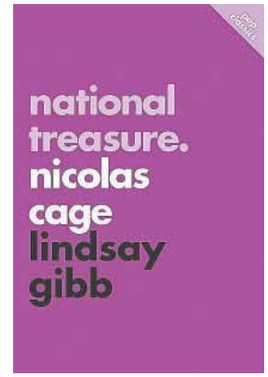
Lindsay Gibb didn't set out to become a fierce defender of Nicolas Cage. It was only after a 2012 retrospective of the enigmatic actor's films at the TIFF Bell Lightbox that the Toronto librarian and former editor of Broken Pencil magazine realized the depths of her fandom.

"I liked him a lot but I wasn't as obsessed with him as I am now," she recalls.

While most pop-culture aficionados are content simply sharing their enthusiasm with Facebook friends, Gibb turned her obsession into a book. National Treasure: Nicolas Cage is the latest in ECW Press's Pop Classics series, a line of digestible essays that spotlight cultural touchstones such as Elvis Costello, Twin Peaks, Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles and the stripper schlockfest, Showgirls.

Except for perhaps Keanu Reeves, there is no contemporary actor who divides audiences and opinions — or inspired as many memes — as Cage. Beyond his eccentric off-screen life (purchasing saber-tooth tigers and dinosaur skulls, his Elvis obsession, whirlwind marriages), Gibb suggests Cage's screen presence is so polarizing because he's impossible to pigeonhole.

"From one movie to the next you don't really know what to expect," she says. "People have a certain kind of vision of him because they've seen him in a certain kind of movie, but then he'll go ahead and do something like The Sorcerer's Apprentice."



To prepare for National Treasure, Gibb watched all of Cage's work — an impressive feat considering he's appeared in more than 70 films. Inspired by the TIFF retrospective, Gibb, who calls Vampire's Kiss and Wild at Heart among her favourites, began hosting a monthly Cage movie night in her condo's theatre room. When she started writing the book, she knew she had to take a more critical approach. "I was trying to look at them through the eyes of, 'What is he doing?' I was looking for links between his movies, and trying to see what he was trying to do with his acting style," she says. "He has this intensity, or bombastic style, where he gets hyper in the middle of a movie that is consistent throughout his films."

In the introduction to the book, Gibb writes, "Having to constantly defend something you like can you love it more fiercely." She dismisses critics who have an unwavering bias against Cage and his on-screen antics.

"There are definitely writers who have a certain take on him — he's a second-rate actor that's always going to chew the scenery," she says. "People have their set opinions, and don't let his performance influence their opinion. They've just decided he's the worst. And then there are people like me. I'll always find at least a nugget in his not-so-great films, and see something interesting."

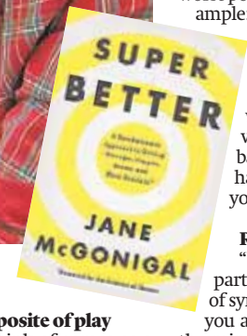
VIDEO GAMES

If you're not playing games, you're losing out: Author

Eva Kis
Metro | New York



"If you see games as nothing more than a distraction, you're more likely to use them to avoid your real problems," says Jane McGonigal. ISTOCK

When you think of video games, the impression might be: mindless button-pushing, no socializing, wasting time. Game designer Jane McGonigal is out to prove that just isn't so.

The author previously challenged the perception of who a gamer is in her book Reality Is Broken, and this time around with SuperBetter: A Revolutionary Approach to Getting Stronger, Happier, Braver and More Resilient — Powered by the Science of Games, she investigates the science of gaming using over 500 studies, and how to turn it into a tool for living a better life.

"SuperBetter looks at about 20 years' worth of scientific research about how games change the way we respond to stress and challenge," she tells Metro.

"Playing games regularly actually helps us build and practise psychological strengths that are really important when we're facing tough obstacles in our real lives."

In fact, McGonigal designed SuperBetter the game to recover from her own traumatic brain injury in 2009, and people have used it to deal with problems ranging from anxiety to chronic pain and even post-traumatic stress disorder.

We asked her how picking up a controller can give us more control of our real lives.

The opposite of play

When we think of games as a way to waste time, it's easy to say the opposite of that is working. But in McGonigal's view, it's depression. "When we're playing, we activate the parts of the brain associated with willpower, motivation and optimism," she says. Think about what is actually the opposite of that — lethargy, not feeling like you can change anything — and it begins to shift your perspective.

Develop the challenge mindset

Gaming naturally puts you in the challenge mindset. One of the SuperBetter exercises is to think of the biggest problem you're facing, then imagine the worst possible outcome. For example: "I lost my job, so I will turn to a life of crime."

Now think of the opposite of that least helpful response: "I will turn to a life of service." You've just taken back agency, realized you have options and given yourself a new goal.

Real world bonding

"Video game play is a particularly extreme form of synchronization, because you are trying to get inside the mind of another player — whether you're co-operating or competing, you're constantly trying to anticipate their actions." This has been shown — by years of research — to increase compassion, empathy and willingness to offer help.

Lessons from a prison book club

LITERACY

Inmates liked nonfiction, books with 'a bit of romance'

Running a book club for convicts helped Ann Walmsley overcome the acute anxiety she suffered after being violently mugged. She penned a novel about the experience. CONTRIBUTED

Ann Walmsley is in a book club that may be very much like yours or mine. The group (all women) meets in a member's living room to discuss a book over a glass of wine and some nice cheese. But for 18 months a few years ago, Walmsley was in a book club that was very different. There were no soft furnishings, no wine, no women, save the volunteers leading the discussion, and no certainty that the next meeting would even go ahead if, say, a lockdown prevented the members from attending.

In The Prison Book Club, journalist Walmsley shares the story of the time she spent as a volunteer at two prison book clubs for inmates, at the Collins Bay and Beaver Creek institutions in Ontario.

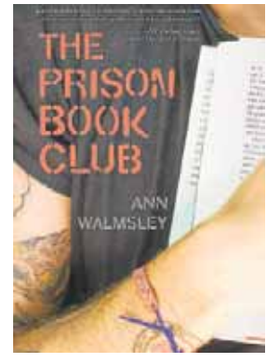
It is an inspiring story of allowing people to exceed your expectations; about a prison for the body encouraging a freeing of the mind.

Over a recent pre-publication drink in Toronto, Walmsley was asked what kind of books made good picks for the group.

"We were looking for armchair traveller books," she said, to get the men away from their prison environment. Memoir and nonfiction were popular. Also popular, perhaps more surprisingly, were books with "a bit of romance. They liked The Guernsey Literary and Potato Peel Pie Society (by Annie Barrows and Mary Ann Shaffer) ... they were all a bit wrapped up in the love story of Juliet."

Seeing things through another person's eyes is a central theme of The Prison Book Club.

The meetings are run by an organization called Book Clubs for Inmates, whose slogan is Literacy, Self-Awareness & Empathy.



Asked about witnessing reader empathy in action, Walmsley's face lit up: "Oh I saw it so many times!" She grabbed her book for reference and gave a long list of examples of characters real and imagined who had provoked thoughtful and emotional responses from the group: Paula Spencer in The Woman Who Walked Into Doors, Aminata Diallo in The Book Of Negroes, Ayaan Hirsi Ali in Infidel and more. In each example, the incarcerated men were identifying with the plights of women.

Several years before she was first introduced to the Collins Bay book club, Walmsley was violently mugged outside her home, an experience that left her with acute anxiety around strangers, particularly men. And yet she volunteered to enter a room with no security cameras or guards present, and to engage in literary discussion with men serving time for crimes including bank robbery, extortion and manslaughter.

The inmates in Walmsley's memoir aren't the only ones for whom the book club delivers lessons to help them move on in life. While the men in the group were learning to empathize with plights of female protagonists, Walmsley was coming to an understanding of her own.

"I guess, in time, I realized that I was a prisoner of fear, and what happened was that with each book (the group) read I was gradually being liberated from that prison of fear. Going in to see the men taught me that they are not just people who committed a terrible crime one day, but in fact they are fully human with so much to teach me."

Tapping into your best creative self

MOTIVATION

Eat, Pray, Love author's tips for following your dreams

Emily Laurence
Metro | New York

Bestselling author Elizabeth Gilbert has made a successful career following her creativity, so naturally she gets asked for tips all the time. Here is her advice for leading a more creative life:

Follow your curiosity

If you think only writers, artists and musicians can be creative, think again. Gilbert is a strong believer that anyone can be creative and "creative" shouldn't be confused with "artistic." "The definition of creative living is paying attention to your curiosity and following wherever it leads you," she says. "It's going to lead to a much more interesting life, no matter what."

Elizabeth Gilbert
GETTY IMAGES

Uncover your "strange jewels"

In Big Magic, Gilbert encourages readers to uncover their own personal, "strange jewels," a thought inspired by her favourite poet, Jack Gilbert: "The jewels that are hiding inside you are begging to say yes."

"The jewels can be anything from talents to virtues to purpose in life," she says. She adds that following what you find interesting is part of the treasure hunt.

Stop making excuses

Gilbert says people often write her on social media complaining that they don't have time to be creative. Gilbert fires back that if you have time to be on social media, watch TV or read magazines, then that isn't necessarily true. "When I start to pick apart that argument with people, it turns out it isn't really a question about having time," she says. "They're afraid. They're afraid they don't have the material, or the right training, or they'll get rejected or ignored. It doesn't really have to do with time." She stresses that once people put aside these fears, they can uncover something great.

Cultivate a creative community

Her book says success in creativity is part hard work, part magic and part of the magic is surrounding yourself with people that can help foster your creativity. Search for groups of people who are curious about the same things you are either online or in meet-up groups.

Practice self-forgiveness

It's human nature to start off excited about an idea, but for that interest to fade over time until you end up abandoning it. Gilbert says the key to seeing a creative project through is self-forgiveness. "You have to look back at what you created and say, I'm still learning and experimenting. Even if I don't know exactly what I'm doing, this is still worth my time," she says.

JOSIP NOVAKOVICH

Man Booker finalist finds light in our dark realities

Emina Gamulin
Metro | Canada

An American-born translator goes to Bosnia to work for the UN, only to discover rape camps that her employer turns a blind eye to (or worse, participates in).

After losing everything else in his life when Serb rebel forces take over his village, a Croatian man turns to his bees for comfort and protection.

A Serbian man who once lived in Croatia but was displaced by the war waits for his cousin to arrive on a train that never seems to come.

These are some of the experiences explored in Ex-Yu, but according to the author of these fictions based loosely on the Balkan wars of the '90s, the collection is as much about transformation as it is about destruction.

"The title is a pun on Ex-Yugoslavia, and the former you," says Croatian-Canadian writer Josip Novakovich on the phone from Montreal, about his latest — a gripping, tragic, often strange, absurd, and sometimes laugh-out-loud funny short-story collection published this month by Vehicule Press. "Many countries pass and change, so do we, even if we might not be aware of how much we change."

He quotes the philosopher Heraclitus, who said that you can't step in the same river twice. "Usually we just think about how the river changes — the water is always new, the new schools of fish are passing through, but you too, are different."

As philosophical as Novakovich is, he also thinks pragmatically. When asked why Ex-Yu includes a cannibalistic tale that takes place nowhere near Southeastern Europe, he admits it made it into the pile because his last publisher refused to release it, deeming it too horrifying. It's also a continuation, he says, of an earlier collection that chiefly concerns itself with friendship versus survival versus tribe loyalty.

In a way it fits, despite the geographical divergence, because the collection is so dark. There's ghosts of the horrors of the Second World War; Dutch guilt over the Srebrenica massacre; a bad batch of an early measles vaccination; lung cancer.

"Things don't have to happen, but we fear they will happen, and sometimes they do happen. Death is something that only happens once, but it is always in the background of our minds — how will I go and how will those around me go?" says Novakovich.

He believes it's cathartic to face our fears in art and that looking only at happiness is neither possible, nor, perhaps, desirable.

"I read a remarkable article about (Serbian tennis star) Novak Djokovic recently. He was asked if he just thinks positive during matches. And he said he tried it and it doesn't work — he has to do both," Novakovich says. "He can't eliminate the (bad) stuff and he figured out that it's better if he doesn't. You can't completely ignore that life is partly a horror story." Plus, Novakovich says, offering a less existential explanation — his dark stuff sells better. "I publish these stories more easily, say, than the stories about my cats."

Josip Novakovich will read from Ex-Yu in Toronto at Type Books on Oct. 16.

'FAN FICTION'

While the majority of the characters in Ex-Yu are ordinary people, the collection includes some infamous real-life characters.

Novakovich jokingly refers to these stories as "fan-fiction." In one, we catch up with Slobodan Milosevic in jail at the Hague just months before the verdict of his war-crimes tribunal. The fallen leader, now impotent, demands Viagra, despite his doctor's warnings.

The title, Just Desserts, perhaps alludes to the satisfaction Novakovich felt reimagining Milosevic's last days. "It was a known thing that he was sabotaging his medical care, not taking his blood pressure pills so most likely it was just massive heart failure," says Novakovich, a medical-school dropout. "But that can also happen with Viagra in such conditions, so I thought 'Why not make fun of it?'"

Facebook launches 360-degree video

Lucasfilm's Star Wars: The Force Awakens is taking advantage of the new 360-degree video viewer. HANDOUT

Facebook has rolled out 360-degree videos in its News Feed, allowing users to choose their viewing angle.

On the web, users of the social network will be able to do this by dragging the video around with their cursor, while on mobile devices they can drag their finger or even just turn the device.

Last year, facebook bought the Oculus Rift VR headset for $2 billion. This latest move could bring the platform's content to a huge audience.

Among those already using the network's upgraded video feature were Discovery, GoPro, NBC's Saturday Night Live and VICE. Disney and Lucasfilm were debuting a 360 experience from Star Wars: The Force Awakens.

The videos are due to begin showing up on the web and for Android soon, followed by iOS in the coming months. AFP

Serial to tackle soldier's disappearance: Report

PODCAST

Season 2 of hit NPR show will explore case of Bowe Bergdahl

The hit NPR (National Public Radio) podcast Serial will spend its second season taking on the mystery of a U.S. Army sergeant's disappearance in Afghanistan, according to reports.

Maxim, which spoke with several sources but had not received confirmation from NPR, reported that the focus would be the case of Bowe Bergdahl, who disappeared from his post in Afghanistan in 2009 and was then held prisoner by a Taliban-allied group.

Bergdahl was released in 2014 as part of an exchange for Guantanamo Bay detainees.

The soldier was said to have been abducted when he walked off the outpost, although his reasons for doing so are unclear and the circumstances of his abduction are mysterious.

Bergdahl was ultimately charged for desertion and misbehaviour before the enemy.

The Hollywood Reporter has since confirmed Maxim's report. AFP

Officials deciding if he should face court-martial

Sgt. Bowe Bergdahl's, lawyer earlier this week asked a military court to publicly release a transcript of Bergdahl's interview with military officials and a summary of an investigation into his disappearance. Defence attorney Eugene Fidell has unsuccessfully tried to get the Army to make the documents public while Bergdahl faces charges, including desertion, for leaving his post in Afghanistan in 2009. Breaking Bad had viewers hooked by episode two. HANDOUT

Pilots don't hook viewers

STATISTICS

Netflix finds it can take several episodes to get into a show

Netflix original series share something in common with shows that first aired on conventional TV networks: they all generally failed to hook viewers with their first episodes, according to new research by the streaming service.

Netflix analyzed global streaming data for the first seasons of several popular shows looking for signs of when people latched onto a specific title and began bingeing.

Acclaimed cable hits Breaking Bad and The Walking Dead and Toronto-filmed legal drama Suits had Canadians hooked by the second episode.

Canadians were on board by the third episode of Netflix political drama House of Cards, while newcomers Bloodline, Grace and Frankie and Unbreakable Kimmy Schmidt had fans reeled in by their fourth episodes.

It took, on average, more than four hours of watching Mad Men — or six episodes in — for Canadians fans to get hooked on the critically lauded series.

It also took six episodes for Canadian fans of the Netflix superhero series Daredevil to decide they really liked it.

According to Netflix, 70 per cent of viewers who watched the hooked episode would go on to watch the full season.

"It's been conventional wisdom that the pilot is the most important 30 minutes in the life of a show and it turns out it's rarely the thing that hooks people," said Netflix chief content officer Ted Sarandos in an interview.

"(That's) not to say that no one ever got hooked by a pilot, but we didn't see a lot of it in the data.

"I also think the audiences have more patience than the networks give them credit for," he added.

Friends co-creator Marta Kauffman has decades of network experience under her belt. But the veteran showrunner said Netflix encouraged a fresh approach to crafting the pilot for her new series Grace and Frankie, which stars screen legends Jane Fonda and Lily Tomlin.

"(They said): 'We don't call them pilots, we call them the first chapter. Think of them like a book,'" recalled Kauffman.

"The freedom that the writer gets from that is not having to establish every single character and every single thing and 'What's all of their back stories?' You don't have to do that for Netflix. They allow for the growth of the information and the growth of the story." THE CANADIAN PRESS

ALMOST good college radio

Billy West has done voices for a broad swath of the Futurama crew including Fry, as well as the Red M&M. CONTRIBUTED

Voice actor creates The Billy West Show

Odds are, the voice of Billy West is ringing in your ears.

Or rather, voices. A leading voiceover actor, West has spoken up for title characters on Doug and Ren & Stimpy, for latter-day revivals of Bugs Bunny, Woody Woodpecker and Popeye, for a broad swath of the Futurama crew, even Red M&M.

Now West has brought his virtuosic yackety-yak to his own podcast, speaking for himself on The Billy West Show, with five editions posted on his website and iTunes of a series he hopes to build on every couple of weeks.

The freewheeling format unleashes West with his vocal cast of thousands, accompanied by the singular voice of Jim Gomez, a veteran director-animator and, here, a stabilizing influence who keeps this whole enterprise from flying away.

Offering a seamless 30 minutes or so of sketches, mock-interviews and other foolishness, The Billy West Show aspires to be ALMOST good college radio, says West, while it draws on classic comedy influences including the 1960s-era Firesign Theatre.

The episodes are recorded in the repurposed garage of West's home nestled on a cozy cul-de-sac in the Hollywood Hills.

With the garage door opened to a perfect L.A. morning recently, West and Gomez are hashing out a future episode amid a crush of audio equipment, keyboards, vintage jukeboxes, a carpenter's work bench and a riot of random artwork on the walls.

"We wanted the show to be all over the place," says West, 63, a compact man with a jazzed-up manner that strikes a fine contrast with the easygoing Gomez.

The show gives West free reign to draw on his encyclopedic treasury of voices, dialects, sound effects and pop-culture references. (When was the last time you heard a perfect imitation of Paul Harvey advertising Kava coffee?)

"He's a crazy student of all things sonically," says Gomez admiringly.

Meanwhile, The Billy West Show could serve as a launching pad for cartoon projects they hope to get off the ground, such as Billy Bastard — Amateur Human Being. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Breakup season

Can we blame all these celebrity breakups on the impending holiday season, or is it too soon for that?

I'm not saying that's what's behind Amy Poehler's split from Nick Kroll after two years of dating, but it's a pretty good theory, right? Or this: "Unfortunately, they just couldn't make the relationship work with their schedules," a source tells Us Weekly. "They really tried, but it just wasn't realistic anymore. They were spending more time apart than together."

Sure, but for some couples that's actually a plus.

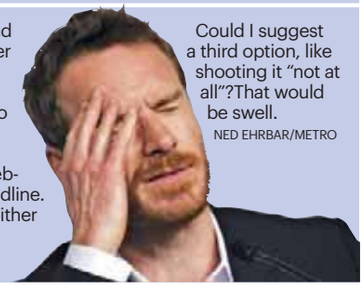
No more sequels please

Ridley Scott has a new movie coming out — The Martian — which means he's been doing a bunch of interviews catching people up on all those sequels he's been threatening to make, like his ill-advised followup to Blade Runner.

Even more disconcerting? He's apparently serious about continuing the terrible Prometheus franchise, sending the disembodied head of Michael Fassbender back to work early next year.

"Fassbender will do (Prometheus 2) with me, and it's meant to start production in February," Scott tells Deadline. "I'm in prep now. I'll either shoot in (Australia) or (Canada)."



Could I suggest a third option, like shooting it "not at all"?That would be swell.

Michael B. Jordan denies dating Kendall Jenner, kinda

Ned Ehrbar
Metro | Hollywood

While we're still waiting for Orlando Bloom to chime in about whether or not he's been playing kissy-kissy with Kendall Jenner, at least one other older man linked to Not Kylie is going on the record to address whether or not they're dating.

Fantastic Four star Michael B. Jordan stoked romance rumours earlier this year when he was spotted leaving a Met Gala party with Jenner, but he wants you all to calm down.

"It's the world we live in. They see white and black. I don't," he tells GQ. "Kendall's a friend of mine, you know? I don't know her, like, that well, but I know her enough. People's perspective on that is what it is. I don't f—ing know. I don't live my life to make other people happy. It's so weird, though, right? A lot of black fans were feeling like 'Oh, my God, he should have been with a black woman' and that whole thing."

Kendall is just keeping us all guessing.

Well, at least all this attention being diverted away from Bloom must make him happy, right?

Flooring

Your condo floors can make a big impression, especially with the new products made from exotic materials like cork and bamboo. Solid strip floors come in a wide assortment of woods like birch, cherry, hickory, maple, oak and walnut They can be finished in a high, medium or low gloss and the wider planks, five inches in width and up, are all the rage.

Laminate flooring has the look and feel of hardwood but at a fraction of the cost. The layered construction makes laminates very durable, and some even have an embossed grain texture to make it more realistic.

Next on the list of flooring is engineered wood. It has a hard coating over the top that keeps it from scratching, more so than a natural wood, explains Jones. The new products no longer have that hollow feel to them. "It feels like it's a natural wood that you're walking on."

Another product popular with do-it-yourselfers is click lock glueless flooring. The edges of the planks have milled channels that snap together without nails, staples or adhesives, creating a floating floor.

With any condo upgrades or renovations, be sure to check with your condo board before starting. There are strict guidelines as to what you can and can't do to your suite.

Countertops

When it comes to countertops, engineered stone made from granite and quartz is pretty much standard. The popular Caesarstone brand of composite quartz has become increasingly popular in condos. It comes in a variety of colours and is durable and scratch resistant.

"It's the best product for countertops because it is virtually impenetrable, but granite is still being used in some areas." says Jones.

Tile

All condos today are finished with some kind of tile. The range of materials, colours and textures is enormous, and can give your kitchen or bathroom that major wow factor.

"It's not unusual to use the same material on the walls as on the floor, but maybe in a different size. A 12-by-24-inch tile is very popular, instead of the 12-by-12-inch," says Jones.

Small spaces featured at the Fall Home Show

Bryan Tuckey
For Metro Canada

Embrace your space is the theme of the Toronto Fall Home Show, and it's fitting because the shape of our cities is changing as more of us live in condominiums and smaller houses. This year's show features a variety of ways to maximize those smaller spaces to make them feel like home.

The show takes place Oct. 1 to 4 at the Better Living Centre at Exhibition Place. More than 300 exhibitors will be on hand to answer questions and lots of celebrities will be taking to the stage to share their expertise in renovating, building and design.

One highlight is going to be HGTV's power couple Bryan and Sarah Baeumler, who are experts in embracing their space since they have built their own home, renovated others and launched a charitable foundation to help families in need make their homes safer and more accessible.

If you're thinking of renovating, BILD's popular booth Destination Renovation is back and professional RenoMark renovators will be giving out free advice. The booth also has dozens of inspirational before and after photos from our renovation and custom home awards.

300

More than 300 exhibitors will be on hand at the Toronto Fall Home Show from Oct. 1 to 4.

Be sure to take in the Renovate with Confidence seminar on the main stage Saturday morning, featuring well-known Canadian design expert and television personality Jane Lockhart, who is also a past BILD Award winner for Best Model Home design. She will be joined by fellow BILD members Joel Scopelleti of Carick Home Improvements, winner of BILD's Best Condominium Renovation Award, and Jon-Carlos Tsilfidis of Fairside Homes. The session will help you get started, give some helpful planning tips and show how to get the best value for your budget.

BILD is proud to bring you the Toronto Fall Home Show. Our members are in the business of building and renovating homes and this show is the perfect place for homeowners to meet BILD and RenoMark members while learning about new products, services, trends and technology.

Visit fallhomeshow.com for tickets and more information. Redeem the promo code METRO2 for $4 off regular adult admission to the Fall Home Show.

LEGAL MATTERS

Taxes keep coming for homeowner

Jeffrey Cowan
For Metro Canada

Q: We purchased a home in the middle of the summer and I understand through my lawyer that property taxes were adjusted based upon the number of days the seller had occupied the home and the amount of taxes that had been paid. We subsequently continued to make instalments and the property taxes are fully paid.

Yesterday we received a further tax bill from the City and when I enquired about what this pertained the clerk at the City stated that it belonged to the former owner. What should we do?

A: On closing your lawyer should have obtained an undertaking signed by the seller to re-adjust. Provide the paperwork to your counsel and they should enquire of the seller's lawyer to compensate you for the back charges. Sometimes the seller is not agreeable to pay back taxes at which point you can have a discussion with your lawyer about making a claim through your title insurance policy. If the amount is significant, the title insurer will pay the amount and then pursue the seller for reimbursement.

Either way, the taxes need to be paid and as the current owner it is your responsibility to make sure this gets done.

Already lauded as one of the top master of business administration (MBA) programs in the world, York University's undertaking is providing students with even more flexibility, convenience and choice.

That's because in addition to being offered at the Keele Street campus, the full-time MBA can now be completed at the Schulich School of Business's downtown Toronto location. Situated in the heart of the city's financial district, the campus is facilitating a combined day and evening format of the MBA program, with the next cohort starting in January 2016.

Ryan Silva, chief administrative officer at CIBC Mellon, completed Schulich's part-time MBA program with a specialization in entrepreneurship and entrepreneurial studies in 2012. He studied at the downtown location and says not only was it accessible (the campus is a five-minute walk from the King, Union and St. Andrew subway stations), but it also allowed for a unique learning experience.

"Classrooms at the downtown location can only accommodate about 30 people so the dynamic is different than lecture halls of 150 people," Silva says. "Students can get really engaged and professors can delve a lot deeper, so you get depth of convo, as well as more interaction with your fellow peers."

No matter the option a student chooses, the Schulich MBA experience offers a real-world experience that Silva attributes to the experts who deliver course material to students.

Forbes magazine recently ranked the Schulich School of Business No. 1 in Canada in post-MBA return on investment among all one-year and two-year MBA programs. In terms of two-year MBA programs, Schulich was among the leading schools worldwide in the five-year MBA gain category. Meanwhile, in the years to payback category — the length of time it takes a business school's graduates to recoup their investment in an MBA degree — Schulich ranked No. 1 in the world.

Under the weather? Sleep it off

SHUT-EYE

More than six hours of sleep is key to fighting off colds: Study

Andrea Janus
For Metro

A recent study shows that those who slept less than five hours in a night were 4.5 times more likely to catch a cold. SHUTTERSTOCK

If an apple a day keeps the doctor away, what does a good night's sleep get us?

A healthy immune system, experts say, which is key for warding off illnesses, including cold and flu.

"It's well-studied and well-known that reduced hours of sleep, particularly anything less than six hours, is known to impact our immune system and significantly makes us more susceptible to illness because it seems to reduce how our immune system functions to rid the body of viruses and other micro-organisms," said Dr. Scott Gledhill, a family physician at the Medcan Clinic in Toronto.

One reason for this could be cortisol, the hormone that your body releases when it's under stress. Cortisol levels can be affected by various factors, Gledhill said, including a lack of sleep, how much exercise you are getting, the food you are eating, and how much stress you feel in your daily life.

But sleep appears to be a major culprit when it comes to increased susceptibility to a cold, says a study published earlier this month in the journal Sleep. According to the findings, sleeping for six hours or less per night can increase the risk of developing a cold. Study participants who slept for five to six hours per night were 4.2 times more likely to develop a cold. Participants who slept for less than five hours were 4.5 times more likely to catch a cold.

Even when the researchers considered other factors, from smoking and drinking habits, to stress levels and even the amount of money the participants made, sleep duration was still the most important risk factor.

"It goes beyond feeling groggy or irritable," lead study author Aric Prather of the University of California San Francisco said in a statement. "Not getting sleep fundamentally affects your physical health."

While the study did not prove that less sleep was the cause of the cold in the participants who got sick, the findings build on previous research that shows the importance of sleep in keeping you healthy.

Log off for better health

With growing evidence that a lack of sleep can increase susceptibility to cold and flu, now is a good time to cut back on things that might lead to less shut-eye.

Could Internet use be a culprit?

Researchers from Swansea University and the University of Milan have found that people who reported having an Internet addiction also reported more cold and flu symptoms than moderate internet users — about 30 per cent more.

The study "begins to get us to think about" whether staying indoors and using the Internet has some association to poor health and poor general wellbeing, said Dr. Mike Allan, professor and director of evidence-based medicine in the University of Alberta's department of family medicine.

"There's a lot of opinion right now that a lot of people, particularly young people, are addicted or using the Internet to an unhealthy level, or computers in general," Allan said. "So this starts us thinking that there may be some support for that belief system, but we need to go further. This is the beginning, what we would call a signal to do more research."

INSOMNIAC OLYMPICS

The keys to a good sleep

There are many reasons why you may be getting poor-quality sleep every night — or not enough sleep overall. Dr. Scott Gledhill, a family physician at the Medcan Clinic in Toronto, shared some tips for a restful night:

PUT AWAY THE ELECTRONICS
This one is easier said than done, of course, but ambient light from your tablet or smartphone affects the part of your brain that releases melatonin, the hormone involved in helping you fall asleep. Try to stop screen time an hour-and-a-half before bed.

Bedtime: Are you ready? SHUTTERSTOCK

HOLD THE SPICE
If you like your food fire-engine hot, avoid these after 2 or 3 p.m. The same goes for caffeine and other stimulating foods and drinks.

EXERCISE, BUT NOT TOO LATE
Exercise tires you out and helps you get to sleep. But if you do it too late in the day, your surging adrenaline levels will keep you from counting sheep.

Russell-mania runs wild

MLB

Martin powers Blue Jays to series victory over Yankees

Russell Martin hit a three-run homer and Marcus Stroman threw seven scoreless innings as the Toronto Blue Jays defeated the New York Yankees 4-0 on Wednesday in the rubber match of a pivotal three-game series between American League East rivals.

Martin turned on a 2-2 pitch from Andrew Bailey in the seventh inning for his 21st homer of the year. Brett Cecil and Roberto Osuna completed the shutout in front of a boisterous sellout crowd of 48,056 at Rogers Centre.

The victory restored Toronto's 3-1/2-game cushion on the second-place Yankees in the division standings. New York (83-68) has 11 games left to play, one more than the Blue Jays (87-65).

Toronto entered play 1-1/2 games behind Kansas City for the best record in the American League. The Royals were at Seattle on Wednesday night.

Stroman (3-0), making his third start after missing most of the season while recovering from knee surgery, allowed five hits and a walk. He had five strikeouts and trimmed his earned-run average to 1.89.

The Blue Jays had their chances against Yankees starter Ivan Nova but didn't score until he left the game after issuing a two-out walk to Martin in the sixth. Left-hander James Pazos gave up a single to Ryan Goins that moved Martin to third base and Kevin Pillar drove him in with a single off reliever Caleb Cotham.

Toronto would load the bases before left-fielder Brett Gardner tracked down a Ben Revere drive near the warning track for the third out. Nova (6-9) allowed one earned run, four hits, two walks and had six strikeouts.

Stroman retired the first eight batters he faced before Didi Gregorius hit a flare that landed in shallow centre field. Jacoby Ellsbury flew out on the next pitch to leave him stranded.

New York put two runners on in the seventh after a walk and a single but Stroman got Dustin Ackley to line out to centre field. Donaldson led off the home half of the inning with a double and moved to third on a Bautista grounder.

Edwin Encarnacion was intentionally walked and stole second as Smoak struck out. Martin followed with a blast over the left-field wall that tied his season-high for homers, set in 2012 with the Yankees.

OBITUARY

Beloved Berra dead at 90

The lovable legend of Yogi Berra, that ain't ever gonna be over.

The Hall of Fame catcher renowned as much for his lovable, linguistically dizzying "Yogi-isms" as his unmatched 10 World Series championships with the New York Yankees, died Tuesday. He was 90.

Berra, who filled baseball's record book as well as Bartlett's Familiar Quotations, died of natural causes at his home in New Jersey, according to Dave Kaplan, the director of the Yogi Berra Museum.

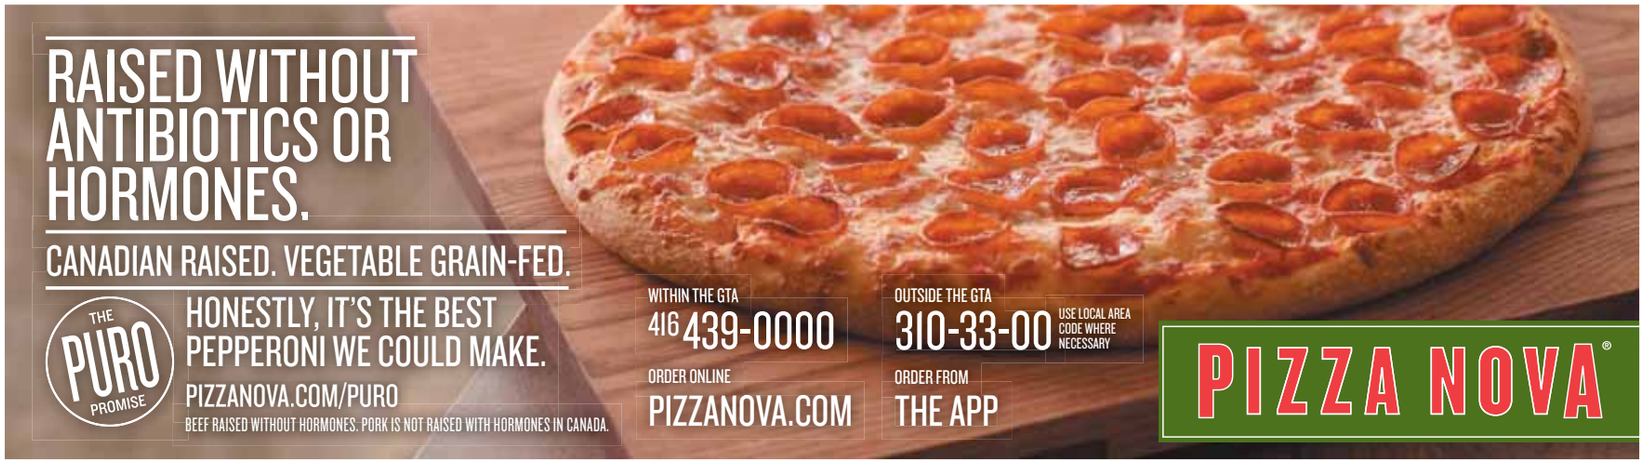
Yogi Berra THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Berra played in more World Series games than any other major leaguer, and was a three-time American League Most Valuable Player.

For many, though, he was even better known for all those amusing "Yogi-isms."

"It ain't over till it's over" is among eight of them included in Bartlett's.

"When I'm sittin' down to dinner with the family, stuff just pops out. And they'll say, 'Dad, you just said another one.' And I don't even know what the heck I said," Berra insisted. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS



Moving forward on the power play

NHL

Leafs consider options to add potency to man advantage

Maple Leafs forwards are definitely curious to see whether their Mike Babcock-led coaching staff includes a four-forward power play this season, and whether it can mirror the tremendous success that format had in Detroit a year ago.

"We used it (four forwards) in the pre-season in a game, and I know they did it in Detroit last year. They were successful and last year, I wouldn't say we had a (league-leading) power play, we were good, we had good execution, but we weren't consistent ... and I don't think you'll see that this year," Leafs forward Joffrey Lupul said as the Leafs prepared for their next wave of pre-season games, Friday against Buffalo and Saturday against Montreal.

Mike Babcock's Red Wings had the second-best power play in the NHL last season. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Babcock was expected to use the pre-season as a testing ground for the four forward format, which ushered in a dramatic turn around in Detroit's power play and demonstrated Babcock's abilities to adapt to changes in his roster and keep the Red Wings on one of sports' all time great playoff runs.

Babcock credited assistant coach Jim Hiller with the success in Detroit last season, and Hiller — whom Babcock says "loves to score goals" — is now part of a Leafs coaching staff that will tackle, among other things, improving a 26th rated Leafs power play from last season.

The four-forward format made wide-spread sense for the Red Wings, whose power-play unit slipped into the lower half of the league in 2013-14, rated 18th overall at 17.7 per cent.

With Hiller drawing up the new format, Detroit rocketed to second overall in the NHL a year ago at 23 per cent.

Manuel in as Bills No. 2 guy

Quarterback EJ Manuel can finally stop worrying about his role with the Buffalo Bills this season.

After bouncing up and down the depth chart to the point he began questioning his future with the team, Manuel cemented the job as Tyrod Taylor's backup Wednesday a day after journeyman Matt Cassel was traded to Dallas.

"Whatever comes to me. Now I just try to focus on that and block out everything else," Manuel said.

Pocock shines for Aussies as brave Fiji fall again

Australia struggled to put away a spirited Fiji side playing its second game in five days at the Rugby World Cup, winning 28-13 mainly thanks to a quick brace of first-half tries from No. 8 David Pocock on Wednesday.

Pocock twice dived over at the base of rolling mauls to help the Australians to an 18-3 halftime lead in their first Pool A game of the tournament.

Celta Vigo shocks Barcelona

LA LIGA

Deadly Aspas stuns champs, Benzema brace puts Real top

Celta Vigo swept to a shock 4-1 victory over Barcelona, while Real Madrid went top of the Spanish league with a 2-1 win over Athletic Bilbao Wednesday on a mixed night for the title contenders.

Two goals by Iago Aspas helped Celta to a convincing victory over Barcelona and second place in the table, level on 13 points with Madrid after five rounds. Celta is second for having conceded more goals than the capital club. The loss saw Barcelona drop to fifth.

"There is always a day when your opponent is superior and can win all the balls and beat you in every individual duel and doesn't give you a chance — as has happened today," Barcelona defender Javier Mascherano said.

WEDNESDAY In Vigo

CELTA VIGO	BARCELONA

"There are no excuses; they beat us deservedly."

Karim Benzema scored twice for Madrid, opening the scoring in the 19th minute after intercepting a terrible back-pass by Mikel San Jose and racing forward to steer the ball past goalkeeper Gorka Iraizoz.

Sabin Merino equalized with a header, the first goal Madrid goalkeeper Keylor Navas has conceded this season, but Benzema scored his fifth goal so far this season after latching onto Francisco (Isco) Alarcon's pass in the 70th.

Elsewhere, Rayo Vallecano beat Sporting Gijon 2-1 and Levante drew 2-2 with Eibar. Villarreal beat Malaga 1-0, while Sevilla — that has yet to win a match this season and is bottom of the league — lost 2-0 to newly promoted Las Palmas in the Canary Islands.

Manuel (Nolito) Agudo opened the scoring in the 25th minute at Celta's Balaidos Stadium with a lofted shot that Barcelona goalkeeper Marc-Andre ter Stegen got his fingertips to, but couldn't keep out. It was the attacking midfielder's fifth goal this season.

Barcelona conceded again three minutes later when Aspas pounced on a poor pass by Gerard Pique, raced forward and lifted the ball over Ter Stegen.

Aspas then sprinted up the field and side-footed the ball past a stranded Ter Stegen in the 55th.

Neymar pulled one back for Barcelona by powering in Lionel Messi's pass in the 80th, but Sweden forward John Guidetti made it 4-1 from close range three minutes later.

Messi had forced a fine save in the first half and hit the post in the second on a luckless night for the Argentina forward.

"I prefer to be beaten by a team like Celta that plays a very clean game," said Barcelona coach Luis Enrique, whose side is one point behind the league leaders.

REST OF EUROPE

Borussia Dortmund's club record winning streak of 11 games came to end Wednesday when they drew 1-1 away to Hoffenheim.

Both Chelsea and Manchester United has easy wins in the Capital One Cup third round over Walsall and Ipswich respectively while Arsenal knocked out rivals Tottenham 2-1 thanks to a double from Mathieu Flamini.

Elsewhere, Liverpool scraped into Round 4 against League 2 opposition Carlisle, beating the minnows on penalties 3-2 at Anfield following a 1-1 scoreline after extra time.

RECIPE Green Gazpacho

After hosting countless sunset dinner parties for friends and family, Katie Lee, co-host of The Food Network's The Kitchen, compiled her favourite summer recipes and entertaining tips into the Endless Summer Cookbook released earlier this year.

Here she shares a recipe for green gazpacho, "The avocado in this recipe adds an extra element of creaminess, and the lime juice evens out the flavors of the onion, garlic, and jalapeno."

Serves 6-8

Ingredients

- 2 pounds Green Zebra tomatoes, cored and coarsely chopped, plus 1 Green Zebra tomato, cut into small wedges, for garnish
- 1 unpeeled seedless cucumber, coarsely chopped, plus 1 finely diced unpeeled cucumber for garnish
- 1 sweet onion, coarsely chopped
- 1 Hass avocado, chopped
- 1 small jalapeno, seeded
- 1 clove garlic
- 2 Tbsp fresh lime juice
- 1 cup cold water
- 2 Tbsp fresh mint leaves, chopped, plus more whole leaves for garnish
- 2 Tbsp fresh cilantro leaves
- 1/4 cup extra-virgin olive oil, plus more for drizzling
- Salt and freshly ground black pepper

Directions

1. In a blender, combine half of the coarsely chopped tomatoes, cucumber, and onion with the avocado, jalapeno, garlic, lime juice, and 1 cup cold water and blend until smooth. Transfer the purée to a large bowl.

2. Add the remaining coarsely chopped tomatoes, cucumber, and onion to the blender along with the mint, cilantro, and oil and pulse to a chunky purée. Add the purée to the bowl and stir well. Refrigerate the soup until well chilled, about 1 hour.

3. Season the soup with salt and pepper to taste. Garnish with tomato wedges, diced cucumber, and mint leaves, and finish with a drizzle of oil. Serve cold.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
You should find it a lot easier to sit down with others and discuss your problems. Prepare to meet them halfway and your relationships will go from strength to strength.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
Focus on the small print to make sure you are getting a good deal. You will have no one to blame but yourself if you overlook some apparently minor fact or figure and end up missing out on a major opportunity.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Take advantage of the good things on offer and don't doubt for a moment that you deserve them. You have done so much good for others, now let them do something for you.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
Get tough with someone who refuses to face up to their problems. You could approach them with kindness but they've had plenty of that already. Tell them in no uncertain terms where they are going wrong.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Someone is a bit depressed and needs you to cheer them up. Calm their fears and remind them that life is still wonderful — and you are a wonderful friend.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You are strongly advised to make no hard and fast decisions until you have talked things over with people you trust. It could mean the difference between a big profit or a loss.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
A whole new chapter in your life has begun and you will soon forget about recent worries and woes. The plans you make now will set you on a more exciting course through life.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Partners and loved ones will want you to join in with their plans today and you would be wise to make the effort. The more you do for others now the more they will do for you.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You have a great deal of emotional energy at your disposal now — use it wisely. The last thing you want is to find yourself bickering with partners and loved ones for no good reason. Always aim for your highest ideal.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
The Sun in Libra at this time of the year can help you reach your rightful place in the world which is, of course, at the very top. Give some thought as to what you want to accomplish and then make it happen.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Something is about to happen that will force you to question your view of the world, especially if that view is ultra rational and materialistic. Don't fight against it. The world is a stranger place than you know.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
You do not need to ask permission to enjoy yourself, nor do you need to ask if it's okay to make money. Great riches can be yours.
